

Gareth Watling

Gareth Watling started his artistic career working in graphic design and then freelance illustration. At this point his lifelong love of birds started to pay dividends as he quickly began to emerge with a reputation as a 'wildlife man'. Following changes within the design industry he started to concentrate more on his own individual work which culminated in 1999 in sales of his work at Christies international wildlife auctions.

Since this time he has recently become a full time painter of British birds and is now cementing his growing reputation as one of the country's new emerging bird artists. His work can already be found in many areas of the world in private collections.

